BEGRUNDELSE

Historisk baggrund : Situationen i Nordvestrusland

Nordvestrusland er et særligt truet område på grund af de enorme forekomster af brugt kernebrændsel og radioaktivt affald. Det brugte kernebrændsel og det radioaktive affald i Rusland stammer fra både tidligere (historisk affald) og nuværende aktiviteter. Atomdrevne ubåde er de største affaldskilder. Andre er atomdrevne isbrydere til civilt brug, flydende tekniske baser med oplagring af brugt kernebrændsel, militære og civile atomforskningscentre, herunder anlæg til behandling af brugt kernebrændsel og anvendelsen af radionuklider til medicinsk brug inden for forskning og i industrien.

To tredjedele af alle russiske militærfartøjer hører til den russiske nordflåde. I perioden 1955-2001 blev der bygget i alt 253 atomdrevne militærfartøjer, hvoraf 248 er undervandsbåde og resten overfladeskibe. Omkring 180 af disse fartøjer er taget ud af drift, og mere end 110 stammer fra nordflåden. De fartøjer fra nordflåden, som ikke længere er i brug, indeholder over 200 atomreaktorer (de fleste undervandsbåde har to reaktorer). Mange har også stadigvæk brugt kernebrændsel om bord.

Undervandsbådene bliver stadig forsynet med brændstof og udrustet på en række flådebaser, som ligger på kysten i bugterne ved Murmansk og Arkhangelsk. Mange er ikke længere i brug, men indeholder stadigvæk brugt kernebrændsel og radioaktivt affald. To tidligere servicebaser, som ligger inde med de største mængder brugt kernebrændsel og radioaktivt affald, ligger ved Andreeva-bugten og med mindre mængder ved Gremikha-bugten.

Ingen af flådebaserne har de nødvendige faciliteter til at håndtere og oplagre det brugte kernebrændsel og det radioaktive affald på stedet. På mange baser findes der store mængder radioaktivt materiale. De lagerfaciliteter, der findes, er ofte fyldt helt op, og fra flere lækker der allerede radioaktivt materiale ud i miljøet. Risikoen for forurening af havet er meget stor, da baserne ligger på kysten.

Isbryderne i Nordvestrusland drives af selskabet "Murmansk Shipping Company" (MSCO), som også har ansvaret for at forsyne dem med brændstof og udruste dem. Brugt kernebrændsel sendes til Mayak til oparbejdning, og selskabet står for oplagringen af det radioaktive affald.

Servicefartøjet Lepse – en flydende teknisk base, som har alvorligt beskadiget brugt kernebrændsel om bord fra den skrotdede isbryder Lenin – ligger i dok i havnen i Murmansk. Industrien startede på et oprydningsprojekt, men det blev afbrudt, først og fremmest på grund af manglen på finansiering. Lepse tilhører selskabet "Murmansk Shipping Company". Fartøjet blev bygget i 1936 og sank under Anden Verdenskrig. Skibet blev senere bragt flot og blev anvendt til oplagring af brugt kernebrændsel fra isbrydere indtil 1981. Lepse blev også brugt til transport af radioaktivt affald fra anlægget Atomflot til den østlige del af Novaya Zemlya, hvor affaldet blev dumpet i havet. Lepse indeholder omkring 640 brugte kernebrændselsamlinger, som er overført fra reaktorerne i den atomkraftdrevne isbryder Lenin, som havde en ulykke i 1966. Strålingen fra oplagringsafsnittet på Lepse ligger i dag langt over, hvad der er den acceptable norm.

Det internationale samfunds reaktion: MNEPR-rammeaftalen

På grund af problemets globale omfang blev det midt i 1990'erne klart, at det var nødvendigt med en internationalt aftalt bilateral og multilateral foranstaltning, som skulle fokusere på de alvorligste sikkerhedsproblemer på det nukleare område, navnlig i forbindelse med behandling og oplagring af radioaktivt affald og brugt kernebrændsel. I 1996 blev der nedsat en kontaktgruppe af eksperter under IAEA's auspicer, som skulle koordinere den internationale bistand til Rusland til forvaltning af radioaktivt affald. Hovedopgaven var at indkredse de områder, hvor international finansiering kunne hjælpe med til at minimere de radiologiske risici, der er forbundet med dårlig forvaltning af brugt kernebrændsel og radioaktivt affald i Nordvestrusland. Kommissionen og nogle af medlemsstaterne har deltaget i kontaktgruppens arbejde lige fra starten.

Bilaterale donorer begyndte med at hjælpe Den Russiske Føderation med at evaluere situationen og finde en løsning på problemet med bilaterale og multilaterale rammeaftaler. Kommissionen støttede en række projekter, gennemførlighedsanalyser for flådebaserne i Gremikha- og Andreeva-bugten og et indledende projekt om Lepse, men der herskede generel enighed i det internationale samfund om, at kun med en stærkere fælles indsats var det muligt at finde en tilfredsstillende løsning på problemerne.

Reaktionen var, at deltagerne (også Rusland) på Det Euro-Arktiske Barentsråds (Barentsrådet) møde i Bodø i Norge den 5. marts 1999 undertegnede en erklæring, hvori de gav udtryk for deres hensigt om at fremme og udvide samarbejdet, hvad angår sikkerheden omkring brugt kernebrændsel og forvaltning af radioaktivt affald. De iværksatte MNEPR-initiativet, det multilaterale atom- og miljøprogram i Den Russiske Føderation, og anbefalede, at der hurtigt skulle indgås en rammeaftale om MNEPR-programmet for at overvinde hindringerne for projektets gennemførelse. Rammeaftalen omfattede en tillægsprotokol om erstatningskrav, sagsanlæg og erstatning. Kommissionen spillede en aktiv rolle i MNEPR-samtalerne og fik et forhandlingsmandat fra Rådet i april 2000.

Forhandlingerne om indgåelse af rammeaftalen blev forlænget fra 2000 til 2003. Den endelige tekst til rammeaftalen blev undertegnet i Stockholm i maj 2003 af Det Europæiske Fællesskab, Det Europæiske Atomenergifællesskab, Belgien, Danmark, Finland, Tyskland, Nederlandene, Norge, Den Russiske Føderation, Sverige og Det Forenede Kongerige. USA undertegnede rammeaftalen, men ikke protokollen. Den oprindelige tekst blev deponeret hos OECD's kerneenergiagentur i Paris og hos udenrigsministeriet i Den Russiske Føderation.

Selv om det var muligt at anvende MNEPR-rammeaftalen midlertidigt fra datoen for undertegnelsen, skal parterne ratificere, acceptere eller godkende den som angivet i artikel 18, "Ikrafttræden, varighed, tilbagetrækning og ophævelse". Alle EU-medlemsstater, der har undertegnet rammeaftalen, har nu deponeret deres ratifikationsinstrumenter hos depositarerne, og den sidste medlemsstat var Det Forenede Kongerige, som ratificerede rammeaftalen i april 2006. Det Europæiske Fællesskab er således bemyndiget til at indgå MNEPR-rammeaftalen.
